

My name is Smokey, and I've lived in the boreal forest region for 15 years. I have two young cubs. Our home was destroyed by the expansion of the oil sands, and we were forced to travel 300 kilometers south to find safety. I get nervous each time I hibernate, because I never know what to expect when I wake up. The companies keep changing the land so quickly in their rush to find oil. I am scared for my cubs, and their future.

Facts that help to support my opinion: